Welcome to Guatemala

If modern life has left you yearning for more authentic experiences, then Guatemala is the perfect antidote. You see, Guatemala is more than just a destination, it's a emotion.

It's the charm of Antigua, a colonial town where cobblestone streets and baroque façades whisper stories of the past. It's the vibrant energy of traditional markets in Chichicastenango or Comalapa, where colors, languages, and traditions fill every corner.

It's the cool touch of ancient stones in Mayan cities from the grandeur of Tikal, once the beating heart of a vast civilization, to the hidden beauty of Yaxhá, where sunsets paint the jungle canopy in gold. It's the heritage of the Maya, still alive in today's communities, woven into textiles, rituals, and daily life.

And it's the thrill of standing at the top of an active volcano, where the earth itself reminds you that Guatemala is a land of wonder, energy, and unforgettable moments.

GUATEMALA, a place that stays with you.

There are moments in Guatemala when something just clicks. When your spirit feels lifted and your soul stirred. It might happen as you walk through the cobblestone streets of Antigua, surrounded by baroque façades and volcanoes on the horizon. It might happen in a highland market, where the colors of huipiles, the sound of Mayan languages, and the smell of fresh tortillas connect you to something deeper and timeless. Or it might happen as you climb a temple in Tikal at dawn, watching the jungle awaken to the calls of howler monkeys and toucans. But it will happen. At some point you will experience Guatemala and you'll feel it.

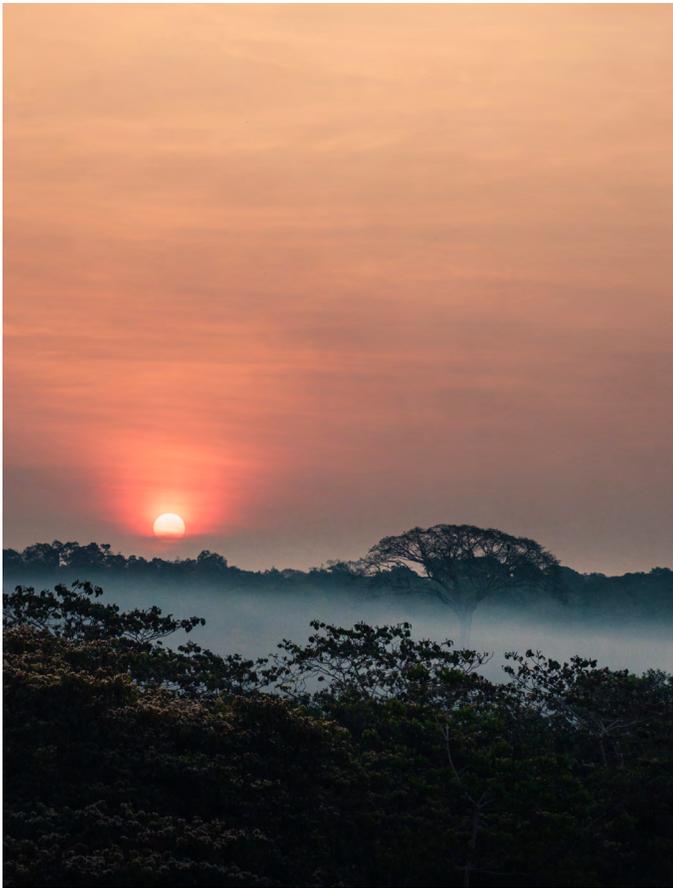

And there's a good reason why: for a small country at the heart of Central America, Guatemala offers some of the most beautiful and touching experiences in the world. There's Lake Atitlán, often called one of the most stunning lakes on Earth, where villages, traditions, and volcanoes weave together in harmony. There's the Caribbean coast, with Livingston and the Garífuna culture music, dance, and connection that go deeper than time. There are sacred caves, turquoise pools at Semuc Champey, and vast cloud forests that remind you nature here is alive and breathing.

Travel across Guatemala and you will feel history all around you from the ancient Mayan cities of El Mirador and Quiriguá, to colonial plazas that still beat with daily life. The legacy of the Maya isn't just in ruins; it lives on in the people, languages, and traditions you encounter along the way.

But above all, what makes Guatemala truly unforgettable is its people. Here, connection is real in the warmth of a smile, in the generosity of a family sharing their home, in the stories told by guides who carry generations of knowledge. Whether you're forging new friendships, learning from indigenous communities, or simply enjoying a conversation over fresh coffee, you'll suddenly realize: Guatemala is not just a place to visit it's a place that feels like home.

HIGHLANDS

Blessed with a landscape of glassy mountains and valleys, the Guatemalan Highlands are alive with busy towns, colorful villages, and vibrant commerce. Here, textiles tell ancestral stories, traditions run deep, and Spanish colonial heritage blends with indigenous identity. SYNCRETISM

Syncretism is the blending of two or more religious traditions. This can take many forms. One example is the church at the Chichicastenango market in Guatemala, which was built on top of a former Mayan pyramid—only the original staircase remains visible today. Inside the Catholic church, members of the local religious community continue to practice Mayan traditions, bringing offerings such as moonshine and candles. This fusion of Catholic and indigenous beliefs is a powerful example of religious syncretism.

MUSEUMS

MUNAE

National Museum of Archaeology & Ethnology

Located in Guatemala City, MUNAE is the premier national institution for Mayan archaeology and ethnology. Founded in 1898 and housed since 1946 in its current building near the airport, boasts over 3,000 m² of permanent exhibition space (plus about 1,500 m² for restoration and research). Its vast collections include thousands of artifacts—jade, ceramics, stone carvings, ritual objects as well as a rich display of ethnological materials that reflect Guatemala’s cultural diversity.

Museo Popol Vuh

Set within the University Francisco Marroquín in Guatemala City (Zone 10), Museo Popol Vuh is home to one of the best collections of Maya pre-Columbian and colonial art in the world. Established from the private collection of Jorge & Ella Castillo in 1977, the museum takes visitors through a chronological journey of Guatemala's ancient past including rare funerary ceramics, sculpted stone works from the Preclassic and Classic periods, and colonial religious art. Its modern display methods, educational programs, and conservation efforts make it especially valuable for scholars and general visitors alike. Combine with Ixchel Textile Museum that is on the same building.

Ixchel

Museum of Indigenous Textiles

Also part of UFM in Guatemala City, Museo Ixchel specializes in Guatemala's indigenous textile heritage. Founded in 1973, it was among the first institutions in the country specifically built to collect, conserve, and exhibit clothing, ceremonial costumes, woven fabrics, and related material culture from indigenous communities. The architecture itself reflects its mission: the building is designed to highlight textiles, with design elements evocative of woven patterns. Exhibits cover not only the traditional techniques and artistry of weaving, dyes, materials, and symbolism, but also ongoing dialogues about identity, craftsmanship, and continuity.

MUNAG

Museo Nacional de Arte de Guatemala

Located in Antigua Guatemala in the Real Palacio de los Capitanes Generales, MUNAG is the national art museum showcasing Guatemala's artistic expression across major historical periods: prehispanic, colonial, republican, modern and contemporary. The museum's mission includes preserving works of national significance and giving visitors insights into Guatemala's evolving identity through art.

Museo de Arte Colonial

This museum, housed in the former building of the Royal and Pontifical University of San Carlos (built circa 1763), offers a rich exploration of colonial-era religious and decorative art. Its collection, including paintings, carved wooden sculptures, gilded and polychrome statuary, relics and furniture, gives visitors a vivid sense of the baroque and religious visual culture of the 16th-18th centuries in Guatemala. The Caribbean colonial architecture (arches, patios, stucco work) also enhances the experience, anchoring art in historical context.

Museos Casa Santo Domingo

Casa Santo Domingo is more than one museum: it is a complex of museums and galleries set within the grounds of a restored colonial convent and archaeological ruins. Its Archaeological Museum houses pre Columbian ceramic and stone objects (e.g. urns, figurines, censers, ceremonial tools) primarily from the Maya Classical period (200 900 AD). The Colonial Art Museum in the same compound preserves paintings, sculptures, silver liturgical objects and other religious art spanning centuries of colonial Guatemala. Additionally, there are spaces for contemporary and pre Columbian glass art, showcases of artists, a museum of pharmacy, and artisanal crafts. Altogether, the Casa Santo Domingo museums offer one of the richest condensed cultural experiences in Antigua.

Casa Popenoe

Situated in the historic core of Antigua Guatemala, Casa Popenoe is a beautifully restored colonial residence built in the 17th /18th century, now operated by Universidad Francisco Marroquín. Originally erected by Venancia López (married to Andrés Guerra) in 1762, the home passed through many owners until it deteriorated significantly, especially after the 1773 earthquakes. In 1930 it was purchased by Wilson and Dorothy Popenoe, who undertook rigorous restoration using period appropriate materials and techniques to revive its colonial architectural character. The house museum holds a special collection of over 2,300 volumes, including books and magazines on botany, agriculture, Antigua Guatemala's history, and natural sciences, plus furniture, silverware, ceramics, paintings, and sculptures. Its gardens are a highlight too, with dozens of indigenous plant species.

FABULOUS FOOD & DRINKS

In the heart of Antigua Guatemala, where cobblestone streets whisper stories of centuries past and baroque facades glow gold beneath the afternoon sun, there unfolds a culinary tableau that is as rich in flavor as it is in soul. The scent of wood-fired ovens mingles with the crisp mountain air, while vibrant bursts of color from local produce, papayas, avocados, chilies, fill open-air markets and shaded courtyards alike. Here, food isn't simply nourishment; it is a celebration, a ceremony, a thread that binds heritage to the present moment.

You might begin your day with a cup of Guatemalan coffee, dark and complex, harvested from volcanic soils just beyond the city's horizon. It's served in a sun-dappled café, where the terrace overlooks terracotta rooftops and the ever-watchful Agua Volcano. A plate of huevos divorciados, eggs separated by a vivid red and green salsa, arrives beside fresh tortillas, still steaming from the comal.

Around you, life hums gently: artisans chatting over breakfast, travelers scribbling in journals, the faint strum of a marimba drifting in from a nearby plaza.

As evening falls, Antigua transforms into a sensorial feast. Flickering lanterns and candles illuminate colonial courtyards where dinner is served beneath bougainvillea-laced trellises. The aroma of pepian, a deep, smoky stew made from roasted seeds and spices, fills the air. Tables gleam with glasses of ruby red vino de casa, or perhaps a smoky ron Zacapa, awarded five consecutive world titles as "best rum in the world". The food arrives plated like artwork: tamales wrapped in banana leaves, grilled meats kissed with lime and chili, and chocolate desserts laced with cinnamon, paying homage to the region's ancient Mayan roots.

In Antigua, every meal is a memory waiting to be made, each bite infused with history, culture, and the unmistakable warmth of Guatemalan hospitality.

THE LIVING SOUL OF A NATION

Exploring Guatemala's Indigenous Culture

Nestled in the heart of Central America, Guatemala is a country rich in natural beauty, but it is the vibrancy and resilience of its Indigenous culture that truly defines its soul. With over 40% of its population belonging to Indigenous groups—primarily Maya—Guatemala stands as one of the most culturally diverse nations in the Americas. Here, ancient traditions are not remnants of a distant past but a living, breathing part of daily life, passed down through generations with pride, reverence, and quiet strength.

The Maya civilization, whose roots stretch back thousands of years, continues to shape Guatemala's identity today. More than 20 distinct Maya groups inhabit the country, including the K'iche', Q'eqchi', Kaqchikel, and Mam, each with their own language, customs, clothing, and cosmology. Their languages, still spoken in homes, markets, and town squares, are a testament to cultural survival in the face of centuries of colonization and marginalization. These linguistic and cultural continuities make Guatemala a mosaic of voices, each contributing to the nation's complex narrative.

To understand Guatemala is to understand the strength and wisdom of its Indigenous peoples. Their culture is not a museum piece, but a dynamic force alive in the weavers' hands, the elders' stories, the rhythms of marimba, and the ceremonial fires that continue to burn on mountaintops. It is a reminder that identity, when nurtured with love and defended with courage, can endure anything and flourish.
